The markets on 'Change rule rather quiet. Wheat is particularly so. Some of the largest houses handling outside business are without orders of any kind. Local operators, too, are not disposed to trade unless to close up deals or make up an occasional scalp. Heavy parties who are long are holding the market for a rise, and the bears are afraid to sell at these low figures at this time of the year. So trade drags along from day to day almost entirely destitute of energy. Hutchinson has been the most prominent recent buyer, and the majority of the crowd has Foreign mariets are not taking much American wheat even at present figures, and of course they would take less if prices

In the corn deal there are a few signs that the clique may be letting go their hold, but this very appearance may be manifested by them for effect, and while pert of the crowd are selling on the ground that the manipulators are unloading, another part is buying and declare no corn has been sold except to be shipped out. The probability is the deal is still solid and in condition to be put higher at the proper time. One thing, however, is appearent, and that is a pronounced gain in the hear feeling among the active traders. The bear feeling among the active traders. The course, increases the danger of running a deal.
